Maureen with Ing & McKee was an absolute pleasure to deal with, fast, friendly and reliable! Took her time to give myself and my Fiancée the best deal! I Would 100% recommend Maureen for any of your insurance needs.

Water is Coming...

Don't Let Spring Floods Ruin Your Home: Tips to Prevent Water Build Up

Spring is a wonderful season for rejuvenation and renewal, but it can also bring heavy rainfall and flooding. As a homeowner, you need to be prepared for the inevitable water build up that can damage your property, cause mold growth, and create structural issues. Fortunately, there are several proven strategies that you can implement to avoid such problems, recommended by the experts at Ing & McKee insurance. Here are some tips that will help you keep your home safe and dry during the spring flood season.

1. Clear Your Gutters and Downspouts

One of the primary ways to prevent water build up on your property is to clear your gutters and downspouts. When gutters are clogged with leaves, debris, and dirt, they cannot effectively channel the water away from your home. This can lead to water accumulation on your roof, which can cause leaks and water damage inside your home. Make sure that your gutters are clean and free from any obstructions, and that your downspouts are extended at least 10 feet away from your home. If your gutters are high, you may want to hire a professional to clean them for you.

2. Install a Sump Pump

A sump pump is an essential tool that can prevent water from flooding your basement or crawl space during the spring season. It works by pumping water away from your home's foundation and reducing the risk of water damage. If you don't already have a sump pump, it's a good idea to have one installed by a licensed plumber.

3. Seal Your Basement

Another great way to prevent water build up in your home is to seal your basement or crawl space. You can use a waterproof sealant on the walls and floors to keep the water out. If your basement is prone to flooding, you may want to consider installing a French drain or a perimeter drain system. These systems work by channelling water out of your basement and away from your home.

4. Raise Electrical Components

If you have electrical components in your basement or other low-lying areas, it's important to raise them above the waterline. This can help prevent electrical shock and possible fire hazards if water enters these areas. You can either elevate them on shelves or put them in waterproof containers.

5. Proper Grading

Proper grading around a home can help prevent water damage. Ensure the ground around your home is sloping away; this helps water drain away from your foundation instead of towards it. Check the grading regularly and fix any low spots or depressions that may have formed. This ensures that water will not collect around the foundation. Use landscaping features, such as plants and rocks, to help absorb water and prevent it from flowing towards your foundation.

Preparing your home for the spring flood season can seem overwhelming, but the tips noted above are practical and easy measures you can take to prevent water build up and protect your property. By implementing these tips, you can enjoy the beauty of spring without worrying about rainy days ruining your home. Stay safe and dry this spring!
